situation in Madras turned hostile for the LTTE cadres after the assassination of EPRLF leader Padmanabha, Subramaniam took Peraribalan to Jaffna in June 1990. There he met Prabhakaran amid the bloodbath between the LTTE and the Sri Lankan army backed by the IPKF. Peraribalan turned against the IPKF instantly. He returned to India in the second week of October 1990 carrying loads of LTTE literature, propaganda films in video cassettes and photographs from his trip to Jaffna. He had the company of two important members of the LTTE's political group, Suresh Master and his assistant Irumborai, and two injured female cadres Jamuna and Jamila. Suresh Master looked after the injured guerrillas undergoing medical treatment in India. He had deputed Irumborai to take care of some of them. Irumborai was a name given by Prabhakaran—his real name was Duraisingam. Peraribalan, Suresh Master and Irumborai arrived at Vedaranyam port. Peraribalan and Suresh Master headed for Madras and Irumborai took Jamuna and Jamila to a hideout in Neyveli.[12]

Upon his arrival, Murugan's first move was to shift Payas and Jayakumar to a new accommodation. Peraribalan helped him find a house, though he wasn't told anything about the main assassination mission. Murugan's task was to give logistical and financial support to all of them. By shifting Payas and Jayakumar to a new residence in Kodungaiyur in the north of Madras, he also provided an alternative hideout for the team. He asked Peraribalan to arrange a fake driving licence for a two-wheeler.

During Nalini's interrogation, she told Ragothaman that at the end of February, Muthuraja had introduced Murugan to her family. By then, she had studied a great deal about the torture of Sri Lankan Tamils by the IPKF and how Rajiv Gandhi was playing with the lives of innocent Tamils. She disapproved of Rajiv's 'returning to power and committing further atrocities on Tamils'.

Ragothaman then accompanied Murugan to Nalini's room. Murugan had no idea what his wife Nalini had confessed to. However, he picked up where he had left off. He said he had no problem finalizing a third hideout. The plot was falling into place with three hideouts; an expert in electronics, Peraribalan, who was asked to design a bomb that could be hidden