Bhaskaran, if his tenant was wanted for Rajiv Gandhi's murder. She was told to 'mind your own house'.

Sivarasan did not suspect that the Mantels had recognized him and the gang. But the Anglo-Indian couple had become suspicious of what was going on in the house. They not only made inquiries with Bhaskaran and his son-in-law Vijayan, Esylen's daughter Merry also tried to peep into the house more than once to see if she could spot Sivarasan. Thereafter, Esylen made those calls to the SIT. However, when no one turned up, the Mantels decided to make no further moves, fearing Sivarasan might come to know and kill them.

In the meantime, the media picked holes in the SIT's investigation. Questions were raised in Parliament about the less-than-desired progress in catching the assassins. Even many questions from Anirudhya posed directly to the SIT members went unanswered. Pressure mounted on the SIT, and on Kaarthikeyan in particular. The theory of a larger conspiracy had started floating with a number of speculations. Kaarthikeyan advised his men to not take the media seriously and to ignore their speculations as 'baseless'. He suspected it was a way to demoralize the SIT. He stood firm in his conviction that he would eventually crack the case. All he wanted from his men was to gain greater momentum in their chase of the 'mastermind' and catch him.