During interrogation, the old man and the teenage girl disclosed that their task was to contact a fellow LTTE operative, Thyagarajan, in Kathmandu and work out an escape route for Sivarasan. After much persuasion, Kanth cracked the old man and made him call Thyagarajan in Kathmandu and fix an appointment. Thyagarajan obviously had no clue that Kanagasabapathy had been arrested.

In Kathmandu, Thyagarajan was waiting to receive Kanagasabapathy. Instead, he met Amod Kanth from the CBI, along with the local police. Thyagarajan was arrested and brought to Delhi for questioning. It had been established from their collective interrogation that Nepal was the planned escape route for Sivarasan and Shubha, and had been decided at a meeting of the Tigers in the first week of May 1991 in New Delhi. This indicated the presence of several LTTE cadres in the capital.

CBI chief Vijay Karan took up the matter with the commissioner of Delhi Police. The police immediately increased security in the city, with special emphasis on VIPs' security. But Kanth was not satisfied with the outcome of their interrogation. He suspected they were hiding something. He decided to shift them to Malligai at the earliest. NSG commandos flew the trio and Kanth to Madras in a special plane. Kanth interrogated Thyagarajan on the flight. The dossier sent by Malligai showed Thyagarajan was known for havala dealings and carrying out money laundering for the LTTE in Nepal and Madras. He confessed to Kanth that he was handling the flow of funds from Singapore, Thailand and Malaysia to the LTTE and was not involved in any kind of violence. But Kanth did not take his words at face value. Soon after he landed in Madras, he tried finding out if Nepal really was the escape route all three of them had claimed or whether it was another red herring. Was Thyagarajan talking about Nepal to divert their attention, even as Sivarasan took another route out of the country?

New communication devices had been installed at Malligai. A fresh intercept revealed a sensational conversation between Sivarasan and Pottu Amman. It appeared that Sivarasan had begun suspecting that his arrest was imminent. He was drawing Pottu Amman's attention to the news reports of
