was the house where Sivarasan had brought the human bomb Dhanu and Shubha after the hit squad arrived in the country on 1 May.

The tracking team got ready to strike. Raju, Kanth, Verma, Ragothaman and Ravindran, along with the Black Cat commandos, broke into the house. But Sivarasan and gang had managed to flee again. The only person found was Bhaskaran's son-in-law Vijayan and daughter Selvaluxmi. The mastermind of the assassination must have suspected afoul when Bhaskaran had not returned home for over two days. The SIT found the container of the explosives suspected to be used in the assassination, some components of the UHF transmitter Sivarasan was using for communicating with Jaffna and a spare glass eye, audio cassettes containing LTTE songs, detective novels, a Kawasaki Bajaj motorcycle key, and photos of Sivarasan with Jayakumar's family. The SIT painfully realized it should have acted upon the anonymous caller's alert about Sivarasan's presence in her neighbouring house around the time Athirai and Kanagasabapathy were caught in Delhi.[2]

The revelations made by Vijayan, Bhaskaran and Selvaluxmi were stunning. The SIT got first-hand information on the mastermind, someone they had lived with before and after the assassination. Vijayan used to be a lorry driver in Sri Lanka. By the end of 1989, he had started repairing damaged vehicles of the LTTE and risen in its ranks. His business took a hit when the IPKF began driving out the LTTE and started cleaning the jungles of Jaffna of the LTTE's hideouts and bunkers. Vijay, his wife Selvaluxmi and father-in-law Bhaskaran relocated to India on 12 September 1990. But before that, Sivarasan asked him to rent a house in Madras where he would have to accommodate a few LTTE activists. In the first week of May 1991, Sivarasan came to his Madras house with Shubha and Dhanu. Besides some daily essentials, Sivarasan carried only a wireless set. Vijayan had to procure a car battery from the local market to activate the wireless set. Sivarasan brought in more communication instruments within two days. He also got LTTE activist Nero to operate the UHF communication set.[3]

One day, Sivarasan bought Vijay's wife a television set. She was pregnant then. Sivarasan told her television programmes would keep her entertained when she felt unwell. Normally, Sivarasan would connect with
