the LTTE. He had reached Jaipur on 19 May, two days before the assassination, with the task of fixing hideouts for the assassins. He could not produce a single piece of evidence to link his artificial-leg problem with Dr Sethi's medical facility. Neither did anyone from Dr Sethi's office remember any inquiry ever being made by him. He had stayed at the Golden Hotel, Jaipur, from 19 to 23 May, before shifting to Hotel Vikram, where he was arrested.[12]

Instead of any evidence that could indicate his arrival in the city for medical treatment, what the SIT found was a small notebook containing the phone numbers of Payas, Peraribalan and Thambi Anna; and a letter from Santhan asking him to keep changing hotels after the assassination. The SIT asked why he, not a senior leader of the LTTE, had to be sent to a specialist in Jaipur when his artificial leg could have been fixed at any other place, say Madras and Bangalore, which also had many surgeons of repute. And why was he in Jaipur for so long and still not had his leg operated on? Sivaruban had no convincing replies to those questions. It only made the SIT's beliefs stronger that he had been deputed to Jaipur to find a hideout for Sivarasan and Shubha to help them escape.[13]

When Anirudhya contacted the clinic, they requested their name to be kept out of it.

It looked like the SIT was being able to arrest everyone connected to the assassination except Sivarasan and Shubha. Kaarthikeyan sat with the team and asked who, from those in their custody, was still withholding information about Sivarasan. He asked all the officers one by one. The most common reply was Jayakumar. He was brought to the interrogation room. After a while, he revealed that something belonging to Sivarasan was concealed in a 'hole' in the kitchen of the house in MR Nagar. He assumed it was something 'very important', as Sivarasan would always send him out of the room before looking at it. Within hours, Jayakumar was guiding Verma and Ragothaman to the house. He took them straight to the kitchen, where he said there was a hole below the floor tiles. The raiding team ripped up the floor and discovered, to its shock, a damp three-foot-deep trench under a two-by-two-foot kitchen tile.[14]
