A STANDARD PRACTICE FOLLOWED IN THE INTERROGATION OF criminals is asking them the same question over and over again. Besides applying other tactics, the SIT asked the same question to all the assassins and tallied their replies to see if there were discrepancies. Ragothaman was interrogating Robert Payas and Jayakumar probably for the tenth time. He was deliberately asking hypothetical questions. One of them was what would have happened if the assassins had failed to kill Rajiv Gandhi at Sriperumbudur. Neither had any answer to offer. Ragothaman already knew about the LTTE's plan B to eliminate Rajiv in New Delhi using the human bomb Athirai. Ragothaman wanted to know if Payas and Jayakumar were aware of it. That would have defined their role in the conspiracy to kill the former Indian Prime Minister, besides corroborating the confessions made earlier by Athirai and Kanagasabapathy.

After a while, both Payas and Jayakumar revealed that the LTTE's intelligence chief Pottu Amman had a plan B in case his plan in Madras failed. Then the place of strike would be Delhi. Pottu Amman had sent another human bomb—Sonia alias Athirai alias Akila—along with an old man, Kanagasabapathy, posing as her grandfather to the Indian capital. The next step for Ragothaman was to make Athirai and Kanagasabapathy sit face to face with Jayakumar and Payas. With an increase in the number of the subjects, Ragothaman had asked Verma to join in. Eventually, the four confessed to their roles in the grand operation of the assassination of Rajiv Gandhi.

Payas and Jayakumar told the SIT what they knew about plan B. Sivarasan had devised a plan to infiltrate a travel agency named M/s President Travel Services in the capital that was run by V.
