Inter-city communication between security agencies is not their strongest suit. And that's precisely what happened in Coimbatore too. Neither did the tracking team of the SIT inform the Coimbatore Police about their arrival in the city to catch Dixon, and nor did the latter think it necessary to inform the SIT about Vicky, an associate of Dixon, in their custody. Enthused by its catch, the local police went overboard. Instead of handing Vicky over to the SIT, it took a heavily armed unit and raided the house where Dixon would supposedly be found. But with the sudden disappearance of Vicky and Raghu, Dixon and Guna knew something was wrong. Both took their cyanide pills when the armed police tried to break into their house in Muthusamy Servai Street.

Anticipating that the LTTE operatives might be carrying cyanide pills, the SP, Muththu Karuppan, had asked Dixon and Guna to surrender, saying no harm would come to them. Dixon, as intercepted by the police, tried to inform Pottu Amman about the situation. Pottu Amman instructed them to destroy whatever material there was in the house before biting the cyanide pills in a quick reply and had closed the communication. Dixon ensured that the police team was caught up in negotiation as Guna destroyed all incriminating documents pertaining to the LTTE's operations, photo albums, the VHF transmitter set and large sums of currency notes. He burnt them over a gas stove in the kitchen. Once done, Dixon and Guna took no chances. They blasted the interior with grenades to wipe out whatever evidence was still left. After that they shot each other and took their cyanide pills. Such was their dedication to the LTTE.

And all this was happening while the SIT's tracking team was looking for Dixon in the same city.

After the botched operation, realizing that it had overestimated its ability to deal with LTTE operatives, the Coimbatore Police handed over Vicky and Raghu to the SIT and sent the bodies of Dixon and Guna for post-mortem. But the SIT was obviously upset with the Coimbatore Police for not informing them about Vicky and not even bothering to tell them that he had revealed Dixon's hideout in Coimbatore. The tracking team had the Black Cat commandos, specially trained to disarm terrorists in close-
