VICKY WAS THE ONLY MEMBER OF THE LTTE'S POLITICAL GROUP who was in the SIT's custody. Ragothaman sat up with him in Madras and started digging for a fresh lead for the tracking team in Bangalore. Vicky started singing. The house in Indira Nagar was taken on rent by a married couple and LTTE activist K. Jagannathan and Sivapackiam in the third week of March, when Irumborai, Suresh Master's assistant, was planning to shift an injured cadre, Jamuna, from Neyveli to Bangalore. But nobody ever moved any injured cadre from one hideout to another unless there was approval from the top. In the second week of June, Irumborai visited the girls in Neyveli to see if Jamuna had her amputated leg replaced by an artificial one. She was barely seventeen years old and had lost her right leg in an ambush in the Jaffna fort earlier. She seemed fine with a perfect artificial leg. He told her to be ready to leave for a new hideout soon, where she would have to undergo physiotherapy. Hopefully she could return to Jaffna soon.[1]

When Irumborai returned to Madras and met Suresh Master to debrief him about the progress in Neyveli, the latter gave him unpleasant news. The CBI had got his photograph from a raid and was looking for him. He cautioned him not to venture out of the house and to wait for his instructions. In about three or four days, Suresh Master got back with a Maruti van. Accompanying him was Rangan, who would drive the van to Bangalore and take Irumborai with him.

Rangan was a Sri Lankan national who had joined the LTTE movement in 1983 and was trained in military drills. He proved his mettle in the war with the Sri Lankan army in 1984 and earned accolades from Prabhakaran. However, he was seriously injured in the war and was 'grounded', or removed from field operations. Prabhakaran gave him logistics to handle,
