shifting them between the houses to shopping for Sivarasan's daily requirements. They were Bangaloreans, and hence no one suspected them and believed their film-shooting story. Their presence lent credibility to the fugitives and the injured cadres, some of whom were undergoing treatment at Kalappa Nursing Home.

Meanwhile, Vicky was questioned again. He spoke about a personal wireless set that Sivarasan owned, which he had not destroyed and carried along with his personal belongings. Trichy Santhan had taken it away after the fugitives were brought under his care by Amman. Trichy's personal wireless set was destroyed by Dixon just before he and Guna died by suicide in Coimbatore. All code sheets had been destroyed too, leaving Trichy with neither a code sheet nor an operator. He had one injured LTTE boy, though—Vardhan—who had some basic knowledge in operating a wireless set. Trichy had asked the boy to take the set to an empty, quiet place and try to contact Jaffna. He had categorically warned Vardhan against using it in the house, as it would affect TV transmission, which would alert the police. Vicky's revelation was shared with the Trichy Police immediately.[13]

Luckily for the Trichy Police, Vardhan didn't heed Trichy's note of caution and used the wireless set in the house. The police intercepted the transmission and raided the house. They caught Vardhan and a girl, Sumathi. Once there, it was easy to find Sivarasan's wireless set along with records of LTTE militants belonging to the political group who were under the control of Trichy. The records revealed their real names, cadre names, addresses and details of family members. The only Indian to figure on the list was Irumborai. The loss of the wireless set left Trichy helpless as he was cut off from Jaffna.

Sri Kumar believed the fugitives were still in Bangalore. But the possibility of their getting caught alive was increasingly doubtful. His experience from the last raid was that the cyanide antidote had prolonged
