SIT must have come to know about the vehicles and therefore would be looking for those colours and models. The registration plates of the cars were frequently changed. Using Ranganath's connections, Suresh Master had another house rented in Bangalore's Konanakunte. A drama took place when Suresh Master wanted to shift Sivarasan, Shubha, Nero, Amman, Jamuna and others to the new house. Sivarasan insisted that Ranganath and his wife Mridula shift with them. He had acted in a similar fashion with Vijayan and Selvaluxmi in the Kodungaiyur hideout earlier in Madras, as he didn't trust anyone beyond a point. Ranganath didn't like Sivarasan's suspicious attitude. To reiterate his loyalty, Ranganath claimed that he could have got more than fifteen lakh rupees in reward by handing him over to the SIT, but he didn't, despite the severe financial crisis he was going through. Sivarasan had raised his gun on him and asked what the guarantee was that he wouldn't do so in future. An unruffled Ranganath had simply produced a cyanide capsule from his pocket and said that he always carried it with him and that his loyalty need not be questioned. Sivarasan was impressed.

Following the raid on the Indira Nagar house and the subsequent death of the two LTTE cadres from cyanide pills, people in Karnataka had become watchful. The residents of Muthati, where Ranganath had rented a house for 'film-shooting', had become suspicious of the injured boys in the house. They started doubting if they were film extras at all. Some of them called up the police. But repeating the same mistake that the Coimbatore Police had made in their overenthusiasm in trying to catch Dixon and Guna, the Bangalore Police, too, didn't inform the tracking team before going to raid the houses in Muthati and Biroota. There were nine boys in the Muthati house and eight in Biroota. Of them, twelve bit their cyanide capsules and died while the remaining were hospitalized. The Bangalore Police did not have cyanide antidotes or a doctor and had never dealt with a case of mass suicide. They were clueless. Most of the raiding policemen could not bear the ghastly sight of the young boys convulsing from acute pain and vomiting blood and had to rush out of the house, leaving the boys to their fate.[14]
