one jogged at noon in Delhi's summer. Anirudhya asked a colleague where he could find Suri.

India Today's legendary cartoonist Ajit Ninan sat in a cubicle adjacent to the reception. An hour of his life wouldn't pass without him cracking a joke or bringing a smile to your face. Anirudhya stopped by and Ninan said, 'You still haven't moved your ass to Madras?' Anirudhya asked who Suri was and where he sat. Ninan gave him a serious look and said, 'Be careful with him. His name is Arun Suri, very similar to that of the boss Aroon Purie.' Anirudhya didn't react. He was too new in the set-up.

Ninan called out, 'Suri?' The guy sat right opposite the cartoonist's cubicle. Ninan introduced Anirudhya to him. Suri took a look at the newcomer and said he would check with Badhwar and get back on whether Anirudhya needed to travel to Madras. Ninan, in his inimitable style, poked Suri, 'Footage baad mein khana, do his work now. Poor chap has to leave for Madras ASAP.'
