- A small guest house, where foreign tourists stay for long periods, said that foreign tourists began to leave after the note ban was announced as they found it difficult to cope with the new situation. 'Overall business has gone down by 70 per cent and we have been idle since demonetization. Everyone from the owner to the waiters has been affected by the note ban,' the manager said.
- Anil, who owns a store that sells gifts, ornamental, and decoration items, said, 'In winter we have good sales from foreign tourists but their number has been reduced to just 10 per cent of the expected norm. Our overall sales are down to 50 per cent of what one expects in this season. Conditions are still relatively secure for people like us, but it has been worse for poor people, workers and villagers.'[27]

Small Retailers and Traders

Indian retail trade is estimated to have a turnover of approximately ₹14,000 crore per day, of which 60 per cent is generated in urban areas and 40 per cent in rural areas.

A report by India Spend[28] suggests that there are at least 12 to 14 million kirana (neighbourhood grocery retail) shops in India. In a sample survey of such shops in January 2017, they found that nearly 80 per cent of the shops reported losses over 50 per cent or higher and less than 38 per cent had adopted cashless methods of transactions. Shopkeepers continued extending credit to regular customers but, in the process, were harming themselves financially. They were also forced to buy more goods than they needed because the suppliers couldn't provide change.

- Yogesh Prajapati, a kirana store owner, said, 'Earlier, I would have one customer every hour at least; now days go by without a sale.'
