weeks, there has already been a downfall of about 25–30 per cent in the trend of orders.'[36]

Brassware Manufactures and Exporters

The brassware export industry in Moradabad earns over $1 billion in annual revenue, making Moradabad one of the largest generators of exports of handicrafts in India. The bulk of the brass industry's exports go to Europe, the US and Australia.

- 'This is a very sensitive industry,' said Prashant Garg of Gargsons Exports, one of the larger export houses in the city. 'Our quality, the intricacy of the workmanship and our commitment, it's dependent on all these factors. There will be shows, there will be requirements, how will these be fulfilled? The market has always run on cash and demonetization has made it difficult for us to pay the artisans.'
- Mohammed Idris is 64 years old and is busy carving intricate patterns on a brass vase. The work, he explains, is known as soda kalam. 'I do three vases every day. Beyond that, my eyes hurt.' For each vase, he charges ₹300. 'Until 8 November, I used to finish 21 vases in a week, working on all seven days. Since then my work has been cut by more than half. Now, I work only three days a week.'[37]

Secondary Steel Industry

The secondary steel industry in India consists of an integrated supply chain starting from rolling mills, furnaces, sponge iron plants, and steel traders down to agents. The retail secondary steel market is completely dependent on cash for its business. Once the flow of cash stopped, this market stopped too.
