8. Addressing the BJP Parliamentary meeting in December 2016, the PM, Narendra Modi, cited the Wanchoo Committee's Interim recommendations to claim that what Indira Gandhi did not have the courage to do, he had now done. A year later, at a poll rally in Himachal Pradesh in November 2017, PM Modi defended demonetization, saying that if former prime minister Indira Gandhi had carried out the note ban back in the 1970s, it would not have been necessary in 2016. 'Had she done note ban when needed, I would not have had to carry out this big task.' In both instances, he ignored the fact that Prime Minister Morarji Desai, leader of the Janata party coalition government, in which the Jan Sangh was a major constituent, had demonetized the ₹1,000, 5,000 and 10,000 notes in 1978. When Indira Gandhi returned to power in 1980 and until her assassination in 1984, the ₹100 note was the highest denomination note in circulation!
