3. More importantly, we can also see the effect that these decisions had on their successors – and their unwillingness to take major policy decisions based on the fallout of what had happened earlier. For example, in the four decades since 1976, no political party in India has dared to tackle the issue of population. That population growth is slowing organically, as a result not of policy actions, but of growing women's empowerment, lower infant mortality, and the growing aspirations of India's middle class, is one of the delightful unintended consequences of the government not taking policy measures that meddle with individual choices.
4. Gold, jewellery, land and property, shareholdings in companies, offshore bank accounts, art, race horses, yachts, crypto-currencies, etc., are common asset classes in which black wealth is held, especially if they can be held anonymously. In India, we refer to such anonymous holdings of black wealth as benami holdings.

8. Transparency International is a Berlin-based NGO working against corruption. It prepares an annual Corruption Perception Index (CPI), which ranks 180 countries based upon institutional perceptions of public sector corruption on a scale of 0–100. A score of zero indicates a 'highly corrupt' nation while 100 indicates a 'very clean' one. The CPI has emerged as one of the leading barometers of public sector corruption in the world. Its reports are based both on a compilation of other surveys and indices of corruption and in-
