Brothers and sisters, I was not born to capture power. My dear countrymen, I have left my home, my family, everything for the nation … I constituted a small team 10 months ago to execute a big operation. It was a humongous task, to print currency notes, distributing them to different banks. We had to keep it under wraps very carefully because the corrupt have strong sources within the government. If the information got leaked, they would have settled their accounts.

I have just asked for 50 days for demonetization work. Dear countrymen, please give me these 50 days. I am not demanding anything else. If you face any difficulty after that, if you find me dishonest in my effort, you can punish me in whatever way you would wish to, at any crossroad of the country.

~

Once the country becomes clean within these 50 days, then we need not be worried even about a single corrupt mosquito… Those who didn't throw a penny in the waters of Ganga are sinking their bundles in it… You are now witnessing people accused of 2G Scam and Coal Scam standing in queue to exchange their currency and get ₹4,000.

These measures are inevitable if the condition of honest and poor people of the country is to be improved. This I will implement for the poor, for their better health, for their better education, for household, for providing medicine to the elderly.

Meanwhile, as members of Parliament reacted in shock and anger to the chaos caused by demonetization, and reports of deaths of people standing in queues started pouring in, the Parliament's winter session that commenced on 16 November 2016 was disrupted, no business was transacted, and crucial bills such as the GST implementation bill did not get passed.

Nevertheless, notwithstanding the noisy scenes in the Parliament and the ever-lengthening queues outside banks, the citizens of India remained stoically calm. Many continued to profess their support for the move, despite the obvious inconvenience they were compelled to face.
