withdraw their own cash? What gave the powers to the RBI to ration currency notes in the country? If there are no laws that you can cite, why should you not be prosecuted and removed for abuse of power of office?

8. Why have there been so many flip-flops in RBI regulations over the past two months? Please give us the name of the RBI officer who came up with the idea to ink people for withdrawal? Who drafted the notification on marriage-related withdrawal? If it was not the RBI that drafted these but the government, is the RBI now a department of the Ministry of Finance?
9. How much exactly was demonetized and how much has been deposited back in old currency? What was the expectation of notes to be extinguished when the RBI advised the government to demonetize on 8 November?
10. Why has the RBI refused to reveal information under the Right to Information (RTI), citing inane reasons such as fear of personal injury? Why is the RBI not providing information under RTI to queries that come?

These questions reflected very poorly both on the central bank and Governor Patel.

So did the erratic decisions and frequent about-turns of policy decisions by the RBI. No less than 68 circulars were issued during the demonetization period by the RBI,[5] many of them contradictory.

What were the pressures brought to bear on an upright institution and its Governor that led to such a fall from grace, and the RBI, once a respected and revered institution, began to be mocked as the Reverse Bank of India?

Unfortunately, no answers were forthcoming and the silence was perhaps more eloquent than words. To unravel this mystery, it may be helpful to address a few questions.

When Did Planning Start for Demonetization?
