3

Lessons from History

> Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.
>
> – George Santayana

I recall as a child watching Mumbai – or Bombay as it was known then – with fascination as it began to reach for the skies. As we stood at the edge of Marine Drive beside the rocks, watching the reclamation of Nariman Point and Cuffe Parade, our father told us that one day there would be tall skyscrapers where we stood.

It was magical to see these tall towers take shape before our eyes. One evening, we went for a stroll past the Gateway of India. Clutching my father's hand, I was peering cautiously into the cavernous depths of what was to be the foundation of the new