

*Apparently the sultan reconsidered this threat; three months after Manuel's enthronement, he summoned Manuel to his court, and the new emperor arrived in safety. Manuel had decided to stave off Bayezid's inevitable attack on Constantinople itself by demonstrating his loyalty, and he spent seven months assisting Bayezid's next military campaign before returning to the city in January 1392. After this, he remained in Constantinople, and Bayezid's strategy shifted to out-and-out conquest.
