know well enough all things end in emptiness," wrote Lu Yu, on his deathbed, > still I grieve that I never saw the Nine Provinces made one.

> On the day the king's armies march north to take the heartland, > at the family sacrifice don't forget to let your father know.[12]

---

* Lin'an was renamed Hangzhou after the Mongol invasion of 1276; many later accounts use this name for the Southern Song years as well.

* See Bauer, The History of the Ancient World, pp. 494–498.