policymaker is short of time, meeting the critic is more useful than meeting a supporter.

Conflict and negotiation is the healthy normal state of a liberal democracy. Liberal democracy is the endless search for a middle road.

Informal meetings run the risk of collapsing into the power of one or two people. Formal voting systems are a good tool for improving the arrangement of power in the room.