4. It required that the three of the six members of the Viceroy's executive Council (other than the Commander-in-Chief) were to be Indian.

5. It extended the principle of communal representation by providing separate electorates for Sikhs, Indian Christians, Anglo-Indians and Europeans.

6. It granted franchise to a limited number of people on the basis of property, tax or other qualifications.

7. It created a new office of the High Commissioner for India in London and transferred to him some of the functions hitherto performed by the Secretary of State for India.

8. It provided for the establishment of a public service commission. Hence, a Central Public Service Commission was set up in 1926 for recruiting civil servants[8].

9. It separated, for the first time, provincial budgets from the Central budget and authorised the provincial legislatures to enact their budgets.

10. It provided for the appointment of a statutory commission to inquire into and report on its working after ten years of its coming into force.

11. It proposed the establishment of a Chamber of Princes (also known as Narendra Mandal). The chamber was inagurated in 1921. It consisted of 120 members i.e., Princes of 108 states and 12 representatives of other states. It was headed by the Viceroy (Governor-General). It facilitated the consultation and discussion on the matters of common interest.

Simon Commission In November 1927 (i.e., 2 years before the schedule), the British Government announced the appointment of a seven-member statutory commission under the chairmanship of Sir John Simon to report on the condition of India under its new Constitution. All the members of the commission were British and hence, all the parties boycotted the commission. The commission submitted its report in 1930 and recommended the abolition of dyarchy, extension of responsible Government in the provinces, establishment of a federation of British India and princely states, continuation of communal electorate and so on. To consider the proposals of the commission, the British Government convened three round table conferences of the representatives of the British Government, British India and Indian princely states. On the basis of these discussions, a 'White Paper on Consitutional Reforms' was prepared and submitted for the consideration of the Joint Select Committee of the British Parliament. The recommendations of this committee were incorporated (with certain changes) in the next Government of India Act of 1935.

Communal Award In August 1932, Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, announced a scheme of representation of the minorities, which came to be known as the Communal Award. The award not only continued separate electorates for the Muslims, Sikhs, Indian Christians, Anglo-Indians and Europeans but also extended it to the depressed classes (Scheduled Castes). Gandhiji was distressed over this extension of the principle of communal representation to the depressed classes and undertook a fast unto death in Yerawada Jail (Poona) to get the award modified. At last, there was an agreement between the Congress and Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, the leader of the depressed classes. The agreement, known as the Poona Pact, retained the Hindu joint electorate and gave reserved seats to the depressed classes.
