3. publishing information or categories of information;

4. making necessary changes to the practices relating to management, maintenance and destruction of records;

5. enhancing training provision for officials on the right to information;

6. seeking an annual report from the public authority on compliance with this Act;

7. requiring the public authority to compensate for any loss or other detriment suffered by the applicant;

8. imposing penalties under this Act[4]; and

9. rejecting the application.

6. The Commission submits an annual report to the Central Government on the implementation of the provisions of this Act. The Central Government places this report before each House of Parliament.

7. When a public authority does not conform to the provisions of this Act, the Commission may recommend (to the authority) steps which ought to be taken for promoting such conformity.

[1]Where the Leader of Opposition in the Lok Sabha has not been recognized as such, the Leader of the single largest group in opposition of the Government in the Lok Sabha shall be deemed to be the Leader of the Opposition.

[2]The Information Commissioner is eligible for appointment as Chief Information Commissioner but cannot hold office for more than a total of five years including his/her term as Information Commissioner.

[3]He/she is deemed to be guilty of misbehaviour, if he/she is concerned or interested in any contract or agreement made by the Central Government or participates in any way in the profit of such contract or agreement or in any benefit or emolument arising there from otherwise than as a member and in common with the other members of an incorporated company.

[4]The Commission can impose a penalty on the Public Information Officer at the rate of ₹250 per day upto a maximum of ₹25,000. It can also recommend for disciplinary action against the errant official.