The trade unions voice the demands of the industrial workers. They are also known as labour groups. A peculiar feature of trade unions in India is that they are associated either directly or indirectly with different political parties. They include:

1. All-India Trade Union Congress (AITUC)—CPI
2. Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC)—Congress
3. Hind Mazdoor Sabha (HMS)—Socialists
4. Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU) —CPM
5. Bharatiya Mazdoor Sangh (BMS)— BJP

First Trade Union in India: All India Trade Union Congress (AITUC) was founded in 1920 with Lala Lajpat Rai as its first President. Upto 1945, Congressmen, Socialists and Communists worked in the AITUC which was the central trade union organisation of workers of India. Subsequently, the trade union movement got split on political lines.

3. Agrarian Groups

The agrarian groups represent the farmers and the agricultural labour class. They include:

1. Bhartiya Kisan Union (in the wheat belt of North India)
2. All India Kisan Sabha (the oldest and the largest agrarian group)
3. Bhartiya Kisan Sangh (Gujarat)
4. Shetkhari Sanghatana (Maharashtra)
5. All-India Kisan Sammelan
6. United Kisan Sabha

4. Professional Associations

These are associations that raise the concerns and demands of doctors, lawyers, journalists and teachers. Despite various restrictions, these associations pressurise the government by various methods including agitations for the improvement of their service conditions. They include:

1. Indian Medical Association (IMA)
2. Bar Council of India (BCI)
3. Indian Federation of Working Journalists (IFWJ)
4. All India Federation of University and College Teachers (AIFUCT)

5. Student Organisations

Various unions have been formed to represent the student community. However, these unions, like the trade unions, are also associated either directly or indirectly with various political parties. These are:
