3. People's Liberation Army in Manipur
4. Tribal Sangh of Assam
5. United Mizo Freedom Organisation

9. Linguistic Groups

Language has been so important factor in Indian politics that it became the main basis for the reorganisation of states. The language along with caste, religion and tribe have been responsible for the emergence of political parties as well as pressure groups. Some of the linguistic groups are:

1. Tamil Sangam
2. Anjuman Tarraki-i-Urdu
3. Andhra Maha Sabha
4. Hindi Sahitya Sammelan
5. Nagari Pracharani Sabha
6. Dakshina Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha

10. Ideology Based Groups

In more recent times, the pressure groups are formed to pursue a particular ideology, i.e., a cause, a principle or a programme. These groups include:

1. Environmental protection groups like Narmada Bachao Andolan, and Chipko Movement
2. Democratic rights organisations
3. Civil liberties associations
4. Gandhi Peace Foundation
5. Woman rights organisations

11. Anomic Groups

Almond and Powell observed: "By anomic pressure groups we mean more or less a spontaneous breakthrough into the political system from the society such as riots, demonstrations, assassinations and the like. The Indian Government and bureaucratic elite, overwhelmed by the problem of economic development and scarcity of resources available to them, inevitably acquires a technocratic and anti-political frame of mind, particularistic demands of whatever kinds are denied legitimacy. As a consequence interest groups are alienated from the political system"[4]. Some of the anomic pressure groups are:

1. Naxalite Groups
2. Jammu and Kashmir Liberation Front (JKLF)
