2. Demand of the people of certain areas for separate statehood (like Bodoland, Vidharbha, Gorkhaland and so on).

3. Demand of people of certain Union Territories for full-fledged statehood (like Puducherry, Delhi and so on).

4. Inter-state boundary disputes (like Chandigarh and Belgaum) and river-water disputes (like Cauvery, Krishna, Ravi-Beas and so on).

5. 'Sons of the soil theory' which advocates preference to local people in government jobs, private jobs, permits and so on. Their slogan will be Assam for Assamese, Maharashtra for Maharashtrians and so on.

2. Communalism

Communalism means love for one's religious community in preference to the nation and a tendency to promote the communal interest at the cost of the interest of other religious communities. It has its roots in the British rule where the 1909, 1919 and 1935 Acts had introduced communal representation for the Muslims, Sikhs and others.

The communalism got accentuated with the politicisation of religion. Its various manifestations are:

1. Formation of political parties based on religion (like Akali Dal, Muslim League, and so on).

2. Emergence of pressure groups (non-political entities) based on religion (like Vishwa Hindu Parishad, Jamaat-e-Islami and so on).

3. Communal riots (between Hindus and Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs, Hindus and Christians and so on—Varanasi, Mathura, Hyderabad, Aligarh, Amritsar and some other places are affected by communal violence).

4. Dispute over religious structures like temples, mosques and others (The dispute over Ram Janma Bhoomi in Ayodhya where the kar sevaks had demolished a disputed structure on December 6, 1992).

The reasons for the persistence of communalism include religious orthodoxy of muslims, the role of Pakistan, Hindu chauvinism, government's inertia, the role of political parties and other groups, electoral compulsions, communal media, socio-economic factors and so on.

3. Casteism

Casteism implies love for one's own caste-group in preference to the general national interest. It is mainly an outcome of the politicisation of caste. Its various manifestations include:

1. Formation of political parties on the basis of caste (like Justice Party in Madras, Republican Party, Bahujan Samaj Party and so on).

2. Emergence of pressure groups (non-political entities) based on caste (like Nadar Association, Harijan Sevak Sangh, Kshatriya Mahasabha and so on).
