must receive a broad interpretation and the scope and ambit of such provisions, and in particular the Fundamental rights, should not be cut down by too astute or too restricted an approach".

With respect to the application of the doctrine of liberal interpretation to the entries enumerated in the legislative lists under the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution, the Supreme Court observed as follows[87]:

"The cardinal rule of interpretation is that the entries in the legislative lists are not to be read in a narrow or restricted sense and that each general word should be held to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended in it. The widest possible construction, according to the ordinary meaning of the words in the entry, must be put upon them. In construing the words in a constitutional document conferring legislative power the most liberal construction should be put upon the words so that the same may have effect in their widest amplitude."

Table 94.6 Important Cases Relating to the Doctrine of Harmonious Construction

Sl. No.	Case (Year)	Supreme Court Judgement
1.	Sri Venkataramana Devaru vs. State of Mysore (1957)	It ruled that the right of a religious denomination to manage its own affairs in matters of religion under Article 26(b) is subject to Article 25(2)(b).
2.	M.S.M. Sharma vs. Krishna Sinha (1958)	It held that the fundamental right to freedom of speech and expression under Article 19(1)(a) is to be read subject to the privileges of House of Legislature guaranteed by Article 194(3).
3.	O.N. Mohindroo vs. Bar Council of Delhi (1968)	It held that the Parliament is exclusively empowered to legislative with respect to persons entitled to practice before the Supreme Court and the High Court, and the power to legislate with respect to the rest of the practitioners falls under the Concurrent List.
4.	D.A.V. College vs. State of Punjab (1971)	It held that no State has the legislative competence to prescribe any particular medium of instruction with respect to higher education, if it interferes with the power of Parliament under Union List.
5.	Kesavananda Bharati vs. State of Kerala (1973)	It held that the word "law" in Article 13(2) includes only the ordinary laws and not the amendment acts made under Article 368.

2. Doctrine of Literal Interpretation

The doctrine of literal interpretation is also known as the doctrine of strict construction or the doctrine of positivist construction. According to this doctrine, the provisions of the constitution should be expounded in their plain, ordinary, natural and grammatical meaning.
