[38]The American Constitution describes the incidental or ancillary powers of the Congress in the following way:

"To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any Department or Officer thereof".

[39]Justice Gajendragadkar, while explaining the doctrine of incidental and ancillary powers, made the following observation:

It is an elementary cardinal rule of interpretation that the words used in the Constitution which confer legislative power must receive the most liberal construction and if they are words of wide amplitude, they must be interpreted so as to give effect to that amplitude. It would be out of place to put a narrow or restricted construction on words of wide amplitude in a Constitution. A general word used in any entry … must be construed to extend to all ancillary or subsidiary matters which can fairly and reasonably be held to be included in it."
