education. Hence, mention has been made only of the deeper conditions of man both in the East and the West. The author may be totally wrong in what has been depicted and wishes to apologize to anyone who has been offended. After all, this chapter is a personal and impressionistic portrayal which is open to revision, further reflection, and understanding. The author does not claim to understand the Western man as well as he would have liked to.