Acknowledgments

First, I want to thank Eric Stephens, who introduced me to Hotwire Native back in 2016 when it was called Turbolinks Native. That moment changed the trajectory of my career. Without him taking a big bet on a brand-new, technically unreleased framework, I might never have gotten interested in building hybrid mobile apps.

I'm grateful to the amazing team at PragProg for their constant support and encouragement throughout this journey—especially my editor, Nicole Taché, who guided this book from the first page to the last. Thanks also to Dave Thomas, Margaret Eldridge, Juliet Thomas, and Susannah Davidson for their invaluable contributions behind the scenes, making this book a reality.

Thank you to Denis Švara, Fernando Olivares, Zoë Smith, and the rest of the mobile team at 37signals for building Hotwire Native and cheering me on. And a special shout-out to Jay Ohms, who was always quick to answer my (many, many) questions while I was writing this book.

I'm so thankful to the reviewers, especially those who took the time to read messy first drafts in Notion. Your feedback means the world to me: Miles Woodroffe, William Kennedy, Robbie Clutton, Adam Pallozzi, Chris Oliver, David L. Bean, Corinn Pope, John Paul Ashenfelter, André Brown, and Michael Fazio. And to anyone who replied to an email or reached out on social media, you've given me the energy to keep going.