

On the left, the web-based submit button is at the bottom. On the right, it’s replaced with a native component in the upper right. This not only makes the app feel more native but ensures the keyboard doesn’t hide the button when editing a form field, as shown in the second set of screenshots.