

In our second example, an HTML-based dialog (on the left) is converted to a native action sheet (on the right), which feels much more at home in an iOS app. Using the native control also darkens the entire screen a bit (including the native navigation bar at the top), giving an even cleaner look than the web-based approach.