Acknowledgments

Šumit Ganguly: I would like to acknowledge the thoughtful comments of Jack Snyder on an early version of this work. The usual caveats apply.

Anne Routon proved to be a most patient, supportive, and diligent editor.

Portions of the book appeared as “Nuclear Stability in South Asia,” in the fall 2008 issue of International Security. I thank the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Press for permission to reuse that material here.

Paul Kapur is not merely a coauthor but a good friend, reliable colleague, and thoughtful critic.

ooooo

S. Paul Kapur: Anne Routon encouraged us to undertake this project and guided it expertly through the publication process.

Stanford University’s Center for International Security and Cooperation provided me with an ideal intellectual environment while I worked on the manuscript. I thank Scott Sagan, Lynn Eden, and the rest of the center for their support.

Portions of the book appeared as “Ten Years of Instability in a Nuclear South Asia,” in the fall 2008 issue of International Security. I thank the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Press for permission to reuse that material here.

Jude Shell and Laura Thom provided excellent research assistance.

Šumit Ganguly was a first-rate intellectual opponent, outstanding colleague, and good friend throughout this project.