Chapter 4

Swelling Crests

The year 1947 was a very challenging year for British Prime Minister Clement Attlee’s government. The weather began to take a turn for the worse in January 1947 as heavy snowfall covered south-east England; this was the worst weather the country had seen in the 20th century. The whole country was plagued by months of power cuts and most big cities experienced a gas scarcity. There was a breakdown in the public transport system and all of this added to a widespread national gloom.
