Sir George Cunningham was waiting to be sworn in as the third-time Governor of NWFP. Cunningham had been placed by Ismay and Churchill for a purpose; he had the ability to successfully motivate frontier tribesmen to invade Kashmir.[21] In the period just before the transfer of power, almost every tribe on the frontier was asking him to let them go so that they could go ahead and kill Sikhs. Pleased with his hold over the tribes of NWFP, Cunningham wrote, 'I would only have to hold up my little finger to get a lashkar of 40,000 or 50,000.'[22] Cunningham found that internal tribal dynamics and local political manoeuvring determined who went to Kashmir. NWFP Chief Minister Designate, Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan, and Muslim League supporter, Pir of Manki Sharif, lobbied Pashtuns for the Kashmir invasion. These were Pashtuns from Mardan and Swat. Some were Pushto and Hindko speakers. Others were Mahsud, Afridi, Mohmand and Bajaur tribesmen. It was quite a motley crew. Abdul Qayyum Khan and the Pir of Manki Sharif were the two recruiting agents deployed by Cunningham[23] to raise his ragtag army of tribesmen that would, in the years to come, lay the grounds for sustained and never-ending militancy in Jammu and Kashmir.