Fig. 6.2. Worn-out section of the Rajula Mandagiri edict

Fig. 6.3. Palkigundu canopy rock—the edict is on a ledge beneath the canopy

Fig. 6.4. View of the surrounding area from the edict rock at Palkigundu

Fig. 6.5. The Maski edict, relatively legible and easy to read by people standing near it

Fig. 6.6. Siddapura edict, cramped by the ledge above it

Fig. 6.7. Brahmagiri enclosure with Siddapura rocks in the fields and Jatinga Rameshwara hill in the background

Fig. 6.8. Brahmagiri edict

Fig. 6.9. Ashoka's edict in a rock shelter at Panguraria

Fig. 6.10. View of the countryside around the Panguraria rock shelter

CHAPTER 8

Fig. 8.1. Part of the inscribed Kalsi rock in Uttarakhand as it appeared before a shed was built over it

Fig. 8.2. Stone slab of the Sannathi edict

Fig. 8.3. Rock edicts arranged in columns at Girnar

CHAPTER 9

Fig. 9.1. Part of the historic dam that has survived (and can be seen in the foreground) at Junagadh

Fig. 9.2. Bhoria stupa in the Girnar forest, the massive cut created by nineteenth-century excavations still visible

Fig. 9.3. Copies of the copper, silver, and gold relic boxes found inside the Bhoria stupa (now in the Junagadh State Museum)

CHAPTER 10

Fig. 10.1. Hills around the Barabar caves, the Phalgu river in the background