17. Vogelsang (1985): 64; also see Ball and Gardin (1982): 145.

18. Helms (1979): 4.

19. Scerrato (1958): 4.

20. Sircar and Krishnan (1957–8).

21. Izre'el and Drorp (1997): 43.

22. Oikonomides (1984): 145–7.

23. Fraser (1979): 11.

24. Diringer (1996): 255–9.

25. Carratelli and Garbini (1964): 32.

26. Bernard (2005): 19.

27. Wheeler (1968): 69.

28. See Afterword in the 2008 impression of Thapar (1961): 276. Here, she argues that the intention of using eusebeia was to introduce dhamma to the local people.

29. Sick (2007): 258.

30. This is the translation published in Mukherjee (1984):33.

31. Ibid.: 12, 14, and 30.

32. For a recent statement see Afterword in the 13th impression of Thapar (1961): 317.

33. Ibid.: 319.

34. These are mentioned by Ashoka in the thirteenth rock edict.

35. Filliozat (1961–2): 5.

36. Adrados (1984): 4. Here, the commonalities and differences between the Bishutun inscription and those of Ashoka have been dealt with at length.

37. Dupree (1997): 224–35.

38. Shaffer (1978): 74–5.

39. Ibid.: 149.

Notes to Chapter 8: An Expansive Imperial Articulation

1. This information about Kalinga is absent at Dhauli, Jaugada, and Sannathi and the reasons for this will be discussed in the next chapter.

2. Line B of Rock Edict XIII at Kalsi. Hultzsch (1925): 47.