help Tambal. According to the information, they had crossed by the Archakint road and were laying siege to Kasan.

Hearing the news, Babur without any delay and not thinking much about the absence of important men, tore the fog apart as they rode. He had trust in Allah and was determined to oppose his enemy in the strongest way possible by hook or crook. Determined to win and filled with anguish, Babur stopped nowhere until a new day dawned over Akhsi. He dismounted there. The mighty bitter cold did not show any mercy on all those who came as the companion of their king Babur. Their hands and feet were bitten by frost. The ears had swelled up appearing no less than frozen fruit.

Despite being in pathetic condition because of a severe cold, Babur was determined to stay in Akhsi. They kept approaching Kasan as fast as they could. Ahmad Beg heard of their arrival when they were just two miles off Kasan, after which Sulṭānim hurried off in disorder.

Perhaps, Tambal must have gotten the news of Babur's brisk-paced arrival which made him hurry to help his brother. He reached there around midday only to find his absent brother and Babur's hordes approaching. Tambal stopped short.

Looking at the circumstances, Babur said:[*]

> It is Allah who has brought them in this fashion! Here they have come with their horses' necks at full stretch; if we join hands and go out, and if God brings it right, not a man of them will get off.

On the other hand, Wais Laghari said:[*]

> It is late in the day; even if we do not go out today, where can they go tomorrow? Wherever it is, we will meet them at dawn.

Taking counsel of most of the wise designated men from Babur's hordes, it was decided not to attack Tambal that instant. Babur was not happy with this decision. While describing this situation, he has recalled a Turkish proverb: [†]

> Who does not snatch at a chance,
> will worry himself about it till old age.

Babur has also recalled a Persian couplet:[‡]
