along with many other brave men fled away from Sulṭān Ali to Khān Mīrzā right in the period of crisis. Right then, Muhammad Mazid Tarkhān invited Khān Mīrzā and the Moghūl Army to Shavdar, and once they arrived, he too made a move to the place. He met the Mīrzā and the Moghūl begs in Shavdar but the meeting wasn't fruitful. Rather it almost turned disastrous for Muhammad Mazid Tarkhān as the Moghūls begs even went on to decide to capture him. Sensing that the worst is yet to come, Muhammad Mazid decided to stand separated from the Moguls along with his begs. On the other hand, Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā swiftly rode out of Samarkand along with a few trusted companions and got hold of the Moghūl begs who had dismounted in Yaryilaq.

Babur found Ali's act to be extremly important as he feared bigger disasters at the hands of the Moghūl begs.

Muhammad Mazid Tarkhān had no hopes from both Mīrzās as well as the Mogul begs. Despaired Mazid sent Mir Moghūl, Abdul Wahhab Shaghawal's son to invite Babur to Samarkand. In the past, during the siege of Andijān in AD 1498, Mir Moghūl had proved his loyalty to Babur. He had risked his life in good accord with Khwaja-i-Qazi.

Now, Babur understood the ongoing business was going to hurt him and his diplomacy. Babur had made a truce with Jahangir and hence had to move on to Samarkand. But before Babur could start for Samarkand, Mir Moghūl was sent to initiate engagements with Jahangir Mīrzā. And then Babur rode out with his whole party. The summer winds of June AD 1500 were not so easy to ride. Nevertheless, even winters were not a great time to venture out.

The journey was going to be tough and taunting. It took them two halts to even reach Qaba which was twenty-five miles away from Andijān. They dismounted there. When they were conducting their afternoon prayers, a piece of news came like a storm. Khalil, Tambal's brother had captured Osh. This was extremely shocking for Babur and he was told that this act of Khalil wasn't expected by the men at guard in Osh.

The narrative of Khalil has been captured as below by Babur in Baburnama:[*]

> Khalil and his men were set free when the peace was made. Then, Tambal sent him to get their concubines, wives, and families from Auzkint. And he went into the fort on this pretext. He kept saying often, 'We will go out today,' and 'We will go out tomorrow,' but
