toward Bukhara to get news of his old foe Shaybāni Khān. He returned with the news that Shaybāni Khān had taken Bukhara and was on his way to Samarkand. Here-upon, seeing no advantage in staying in that neighbourhood, Babur set out for Kesh where the families of most of the Samarkand begs lived.

While Babur was there for a few weeks, he heard the news that Sulṭān Ali Mīrzā had handed over Samarkand to Shaybāni Khān. Mīrzā's mother, Zuhra Begi Agha (Aūzbeg), in her ignorance and folly, had secretly proposed a deal to Shaybāni Khān through a letter that if he would take her (as wife), her son would give him Samarkand and that when Shaybāni had taken (her son's) country, he should give her son a country to rule.
