Babur Is Besieged in Samarkand

The next day after having reached the citadel beyond the river Zarafshan, Babur summoned Khwaja Abul Makaram, Qasim, the other begs and the household. They were admitted in the counsels and after consultation, they decided to go into the citadel considering it was a matter of life and death. Babur took up quarters in the middle of the town, in tents pitched on the roof of Aulugh Beg Mīrzā's college. The other begs and soldiers were assigned quarters in the gates or on the ramparts of the walled town.

But Babur's fear was soon to turn real. Three days later, Shaybāni Khān dismounted at some distance from the fort. Despite the ongoings, the town was indeed quite affectionate about Babur. The town-rabble came out of lanes and wards, to the College Gate. They began to shower good wishes on Babur and went out to fight as a lynch mob. They tried their best to petrify the mighty Shaybāni Khān as much as they could for some days to come by. The mob and rabble cared neither for the sword nor the arrow wounds. They had begun to turn bolder with every passing day. They had begun to sally further and further out. Despite the warning of caution being issued by Babur's officials they continued to do what they had been doing.

And then on one very day, Shaybāni Khān directed his attack towards the Iron Gate. The emboldened mob went out, daringly as usual, but a bit too far. To cover their retreat, Babur sent several braves including foster brethren, and members of his own household such as Nuyan Kukuldash, Qul-Nazar Taghai Beg and Mazid towards the Camel's Neck. A couple of Aūzbegs caught up with them at Qul-Nazar crossing swords. The rest of the Aūzbegs dismounted and put all their strength to counter the rabble. They jostled the rabble off and rammed them in through the Iron Gate. Quch Beg and Mir Shah Quchin were trying to make a stand at the side of Khwaja Khizr's Mosque. While the townsmen were being moved off by those on foot. A party of horse riding Aūzbegs went towards the Khwaja Khizr's
