possibly rejected all these narratives of glorification. And the texts like the Baburnama etc. stand apart as the testimony of this matter. In the world of Turco-Mongols, secularism as it is glorified today, was never a virtue of glory back then.

It all begins with the name itself. They have always been addressed as Moghūls, but did they ever address themselves as so? While penning the Baburnama, Babur ensured a clear distinction between him being a Tīmūrid Prince establishing a Tīmūrid Gūrkāniyān Sulṭānate and not the Moghūl, which has been a popular claim of late. One may argue that Babur may have not used the term 'Moghūl' at all and hence the different term. But that too is not the reality. Babur has used the term 'Moghūl/ Mūghal/Mūgal' more than 400 times in the Baburnama, drawing a clear distinction. In fact, he has the worst opinion of the 'Moghūl clan'.
