Babur found Mīrzā's proposal very sound and wise. Babur replied, 'Promise has been made; how can we break it?' Then, Shaikh Bāyazīd went into the citadel. Ideally, Babur should have posted men on the bridge, but none were deployed.

Babur goes on to call them big blunders which certainly occurred for his lack of experience. The result was indeed not going to be very promising for Babur. The very next morning, came the vicious Taṃbal with 3000 men in the mail, crossing the bridge and bashing into the citadel without any obstacle.

Babur was left with very few men whom he could deploy on the way to the citadel and once inside it. He had sent the bulk of his men to other forts, and some had been made commandants and summoners all around. The count of men left in Akhsī was not more than a hundred. Shaikh Bāyazīd, Qaṃbar-'alī, and Muhammad-dost came galloping from Taṃbal, proposing a truce. Babur didn't find it in the right taste and instructed his hundred men to approach the horses and prepare for a war.

Babur invited Jahāngīr Mīrzā to join him too and he rode to his father's tomb to address his men before the war. Qaṃbar-'alī and Shaikh Bāyazīd stood with Babur, but Muhammad-dost rode back to Taṃbal. Babur and his men were assembled on the south porch of the tomb discussing the way forward with the Mīrzā. Babur had assumed that he must have settled beforehand with Ibrāhīm Chāpūk to attack the other two. He whispered in Babur's ear, 'They must be made prisoner.' Babur replied, 'Don't hurry! Matters are past making prisoners. See here! with terms made, the affair might be coaxed into something. For why? Not only are they many and we few, but they with their strength are in the citadel, we with our weakness, in the outer fort.'[*]

With both Shaikh Bāyazīd and Qaṃbar-'alī being present, Jahāngīr Mīrzā looked at Ibrāhīm Beg and signalled him from refraining from making arrests. But perhaps he misunderstood the signal or pretended so. He suddenly seized Shaikh Bāyazīd. Although this was well settled and adjusted, an instance like that shouldn't have occurred in the first place, according to Babur.

They assigned the charge of one side of the town to Jahāngīr Mīrzā. Babur even assigned a few of his men to him as he was short in number. Babur himself went to his side and posted the men and then went to other parts of the town to put the fighters in place.