In this context, the Baburnama has stated:[†]

> For they have said, ‘Ten darwīshes can sleep under one blanket, but two kings cannot find room in one clime.’
>
> If a man of God eat half a loaf,
>
> He gives the other to a darwīsh;
>
> Let a king grip the rule of a clime,
>
> He dreams of another to grip.

Bāqī Beg explained to Babur that Khusrau Shāh’s retainers and followers would come in a couple of days to take service with the Padishah (Babur). Many among them like sons of Ayūb Begchīk had been seditious and the rabble-rousers causing disloyalty amongst their Mīrzās. Bāqī Beg suggested dismissing Jahāngīr Mīrzā on friendly terms, for Khurāsān. According to him, the dismissal would kill the chance of any repentance in days to come.

Babur has written in the Baburnama, ‘Urge it as he would, however, I did not accept his suggestion, because it is against my nature to do an injury to my brethren, older or younger, or any kinsman soever, even when something untoward has happened.’ Though the truth was that earlier there were resentments and recriminations between the two on the grounds of ruling and retainers, Babur was reluctant to see any ill for him. Babur could see the change in the behaviour of Jahāngīr. From the time he had come out of Ferghana with Babur, he had showered abundant loyalty and had ensured to appear no different than a blood relation.

But unlike what Babur wished and desired, Bāqī Beg’s predictions ended up becoming true. Babur has written, ‘Those tempters to disloyalty, that is to say, Ayūb’s Yūsuf and Ayūb’s Bihlūl, left me for Jahāngīr Mīrzā, took up a hostile and mutinous position, parted him from me, and conveyed him into Khurāsān.’

Ayūb’s Yūsuf was a close companion and advisor to Babur. He was of Turkish origin and held an important position in Babur’s court. Ayūb’s Bihlūl was another key figure in Babur’s court who was known for his wit, humour, and quick thinking. He often served as a jester or humorist in the court, providing entertainment to Babur and the nobles. His witty and satirical remarks were not only entertaining but also served to provide a refreshing perspective in the court.