In Babur's period, Daryā Khān's son, Yār-i-ḥusain was in Kacha-kot located near a place called Hasan Abdal. Hasan Abdal currently lies in the strategic region of northern Punjab (Pakistan).

This is exactly the place from where Tīmūrid (distorted as Moghūl) war expeditions were directed to the north-western frontier.[*] Currently, it lies at the intersection of the M1 Motorway and Karakoram Highway. According to the proposal for the multi-billion-dollar China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC), the Hasan Abdal area shall serve as the terminus for its Western Alignment, and the Hakla–Dera Ismail Khan Motorway shall commence here as well.[†]

The place has a significant history. Chinese traveller Hiuen Tsang was in this place around twelve centuries ago. He talks of the sacred spring of Elapatra about thirty-five kilometres to the northwest of Taxila. This spring has been identified as the one at the Gurudwara Panja Sahib.[‡] It was built on the spot where Guru Nanak had stayed during his visit to Hasan Abdal. The spring contains a sacred rock which is believed to contain the handprint of Guru Nanak from which the term 'Panja' derives. According to Ain-i-Akbari, Shams al-Din had built himself a vault wherein remained buried Hakim Abu'l Fath. The same document also talks of Abu'l-Fath Jalal-ud-din Muhammad Akbar's visit to the town on his way back from Kashmir. William Flinch, an English merchant in the service of the East India Company had travelled through India amid AD 1608 and AD 1611. He described Hasan Abdal as, 'a pleasant town with a small river and many fair tanks in which are many fishes with golden rings in their noses (. . .); the water so clear that you may see a penny in the bottom'.[§] The Tīmūrid emperor Jehangir (grandson of Abu'l-Fath Jalal-ud-din Muhammad Akbar) also talks about this city in Tuzk-e-Jahangiri and credits it to in the name of Baba Hasan Abdal who stayed for three days. He goes on to describe his town as follows: 'The celebrated place at this station is a spring which flows from the foot of a little hill, exceedingly clear, sweet, and nice(. . .).'[*]

A Wah Garden in the vicinity was built by Raja Man Singh. It was a terraced garden divided into four parts.[‡] While traversing to Kābul, Shah Jahan stayed in this garden on his visit to Kābul. Even Aurangzeb stayed here for quite some
