It was on 5 May of AD 1506 that Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā died at Bābā Ilāhī having led the army against Shaybāni Khān.[15]

Muharram of AD 1506 was running by. Babur had set out to fight against Aūzbegs through the way of Ghūr-bund and Shibr-tū. Babur still remembered the displeasure of Jahāngīr Mīrzā and he feared that he would side with the enemy. He has gone on to say:[*]

> ‘There might come much mischief and trouble if he drew the clans (aīmāq) to himself;’ and ‘What trouble might come of it!’ and, ‘First let’s get the clans in hand!’

Having that worm of suspicion still in mind, Babur along with his party hurried forward. He rode light, leaving away all the baggage at Ushtur-shahr. They reached the Ẓaḥāq fort and crossed the pass of Guṃbazak-kūtal. They cruised through Sāīghān, going over the Dandān-shikan pass and finally dismounted in the meadow of Kāhmard. There, Babur sent a letter to Sulṭān Ḥusayn Mīrzā through Sayyid Afẓal and Sulṭān Muḥammad Dūldāī conveying the details of his start from Kābul.[16] Jahāngīr Mīrzā had got delayed and when he reached opposite Bamiyan with his thirty men, he saw the tents of Babur’s party where they had left the baggage. Fearing the presence of the party they hurried back to their camp.

Shaybāni Khān’s Further Action

During the siege of Balkh, Shaybāni Khān had sent three Sulṭāns with around 4000 men to overrun Badakhshān. In that period, Mubārak Shāh and Zubair rejoined hands with Nāṣir Mīrzā. This happened despite the fact that Mubārak Shāh had a temperament of anguish and bickering. They lay at Shakdān, to the east of the Kishm River.

The Aūzbegs were moving through the night. One party of Aūzbegs crossed the river around the dawn and advanced on to the Mīrzā. But he overcame them quite well. In that period, the river Kishm was also swelling furiously into a flood. Many got drowned while others were shot down by arrows or pierced by swords. The remaining were made prisoners. Another party of Aūzbegs was sent to fight against both Zubair and Mubārak Shāh. As soon as Mīrzā heard of it, he moved to them after treating his own assailants well enough. Not only he, but the Kohistān begs too gathered with horses, and foot higher up the river.

Finally, Aūzbegs fled after failing to defend against this all-around attack. Not less than 1500 died because of the rain of arrows, the slaughter of swords
