and the flood. In Babur's opinion, it was a great success for Nāṣir Mīrzā, of which he had heard while in the valley of Kāhmard.

Babur's Move to Khurāsān

Babur and his men were living in Kāhmard by fetching corn from Ghūrī and Dahāna. This is where the letter arrived from Sayyid Afẓal and Sulṭān Muḥammad Dūldāī, whom Babur had sent into Khurāsān. The letter was disheartening as it spoke of Sulṭān Husayn Mīrzā's death. Hearing this sad news, Babur immediately instructed to move forward for Khurāsān.

This incident speaks aloud of Babur's faith in the reputation of the Tīmūrid Dynasty:[*]

> (. . .) though there were other grounds for doing this, what decided us was anxious thought for the reputation of this (Tīmūrid) dynasty.

Babur went ahead, raising the channel of the Ājar valley over Tūp and Mandaghān. He went on to cross the Balkh River and came out on the hill of Ṣāf. Babur came to know there that the Aūzbegs were overrunning Sān and Chār-yak hence, he soon sent a force led by Qāsim Beg to counter them. Qāsim did very well by chopping off many Aūzbeg heads and beating them completely. He returned victorious.

Babur and his party stayed in the meadows of Ṣāf hill for few days, waiting for some news of Jahāngīr Mīrzā and the clans. He had sent representatives to them. In the meadows, they hunted wild sheep and goats which were available in abundance. Finally, the clans did arrive and waited on Babur for a few days. They had come only to see Babur and had no sympathy whatsoever for Jahāngīr Mīrzā. Although Jahāngīr often sent men of various influences to persuade them and finally he sent 'Imādu'd-dīn Mas'ūd but he too couldn't do what the former wanted. And when nothing worked, Jahāngīr Mīrzā came to Babur himself. He met Babur at the foot of the valley when he had come down to initiate his voyage further to Khurāsān. And in the haste to get on with his mission soon, Babur could neither pay any attention to Jahāngīr nor he could see all the clans that had gathered. He went riding into Bām Valley through Gurzwān, Almār, Qaiṣār, Chīchīk-tū, and Fakhru'd-dīn's death. Bām Valley was one of the dependencies of Bādghīs.
