Babur saw this as a great achievement and he wrote about it in the Baburnama:[*]

> No long-memoried old man knew that any-one had been heard of as crossing that pass with the snow so deep, or indeed that it had ever entered the heart of man to cross it at that time of year. Though for a few days we had suffered greatly through the depth of the snow, yet its depth, in the end, enabled us to reach our destination. For why? How otherwise should we have traversed those pathless slopes and sudden falls? All ill, all good in the count, is gain if looked at aright!

When the people of Yaka-aūlāng heard of Babur's arrival, they happily offered their warm houses. They also offered fat sheep, clean water and grass and corn for the horses. They also supplied wood and dung to ignite the fire. It was a beautiful relief to Babur and his men who had come from the perilous snowstorm trip of mountain roads. They stayed there for a day and on the next morning, they left for Yīghāch, which was only twelve miles from there. The following day—14 February of AD 1507—was Babur's twenty-fourth birthday and a Ramẓān feast. Babur and his party went on through Bamyan, crossed by Shibr-tū and dismounted before reaching Janglīk.

Babur's Second Raid on the Turkmān Hazāras

Babur was expecting the Turkmān Hazāras with their families to have made their winter quarters upon the road[27] he had taken. Babur also believed that they had no clue about his arrival. When he along with his men arrived near their tents and cattle pens, they seemed to have gone out to ruin and plunder (according to Babur). Their children, wives and tents remained abandoned. Babur soon heard the news that they were shooting arrows in a narrow passage and not letting anyone pass. Babur has written a poem referring to this incident:[*]

> They saw the blackness of the foe;
> Stood idle-handed and amazed;
> I arriving, went swift that way,
> Pressed on with shout, "Move on! move on!"
> I wanted to hurry my men on,
> To make them stand up to the foe.
> With a "Hurry up!" to my men,
> I went on to the front.
> Not a man gave ear to my words.
> I had no armour nor horse-mail nor arms,
