and make a way out.' His call energized the men who were stuck. After hearing him, Nāṣir Dost, Khwāja Muḥammad 'Alī the librarian, Bābā Sher-zād, Shāh Maḥmūd and their followers got off and pushed forward, clearing the way. They fought a good battle there. Babur kept waiting for the begs but they never came as a strong force. They began to drop in ones and twos, but Babur and his men had already pushed the enemy away.

Aḥmad-i-yūsuf had reached Mīrzā Khān's quarters before Babur headed to Chār-bāgh. He accompanied Babur to the Chār-bāgh, where Mīrzā Khān had been. But by the time they both reached the spot, Mīrzā had already fled. At the Gate of the Garden, Babur found Dost of Sar-i-pul standing with a sword in his hand whom he had promoted as Kotwal from a foot soldier for his bravery while leaving from Kābul the last time.

Although Babur still had cuirass put on, he had neither fastened the gharīcha nor had he had put on the rudder. He attacked Babur's unprotected arm with the sword. However, he survived. Babur has said:[*]

> Whether he did not recognize me because of change wrought by cold and snow, or whether because of the flurry of the fight, though I shouted 'Hāī Dost! Hāī Dost!' and though Aḥmad-i-yūsuf also shouted, he, without a 'God forbid!' brought down his sword on my unprotected arm. Only by God's grace can it have been that not a hairbreadth of harm was done to me.

And he has composed a couplet:

> If a sword shook the Earth from her place,
> Not a vein would it cut till God wills.

Babur has mentioned that it was only the virtue of the prayer that he often repeated, that made Allah avert the danger, turning the evil aside:[28]

> O my God! Thou art my Creator; except Thee there is no God. On Thee do I repose my trust; Thou art the Lord of the mighty throne. What God wills comes to pass; and what he does not will comes not to pass; and there is no power or strength but through the high and exalted God; and, of a truth, in all things God is almighty; and verily He comprehends all things by his knowledge and has taken account of everything. O my Creator! as I sincerely trust in Thee, do Thou seize by the forelock all evil proceeding from within myself, and all evil coming from without, and all evil proceeding from every man who can be the occasion of evil, and all such evil as can proceed from any living thing, and remove them far from me; since, of a truth, Thou art the Lord of the exalted throne!

Leaving that garden, Babur rushed to the quarters of Muhammad Ḥusain Mīrzā. It lied in Bāgh-i-bihisht. But even he had run away and hid. He found eight men waiting to fight him and his men at the garden wall. Babur dealt with them very strongly. He was about to chop off one of the men's heads, but he recognized
