him. He appeared to be Mīrzā Khān's foster-brother, Tūlik Kūkūldāsh. Babur's sword fell on his shoulder and he couldn't behead him.[29]

When Babur reached the gate of Muḥammad Ḥusain Mīrzā's quarters, a Moghūl on the roof drew his bow aiming at Babur's face. Babur saw and immediately recognized him as one of his own servants. Just then the people from all the sides began to shout at once.

'Hāi! hāi! it is the Padishah.'

Suddenly, the arrow was shot but at a different target. The Moghūl ran away. Babur was suspicious of this occurrence:[*]

> The affair was beyond the shooting of arrows! His Mīrzā, his leaders, had run away or been taken; why was he shooting?

Sulṭān Sanjar Barlās was brought to Babur as a captive, being led by a rope tied around his neck. Babur couldn't believe that he had a part in the mutiny given that he won good favour in the past.

He wept and said, 'Hāi! what fault is in me?'

Babur and Sanjar exchanged a few words for a while. Babur did not appear initially in any mood to let him go at ease. But ultimately, Babur gave amnesty to him.[†]

> But as he was the sister's son of my Khān dada's mother, Shāh Begum, I gave the order, 'Do not lead him with such dishonor; it is not death.'

Now they left the place, but Babur hadn't forgotten about Mīrzā Khān. He sent one of the begs of fort, Aḥmad-i-qasim Kohbur to pursue Mīrzā Khān.

After leaving Bāgh-i-bihisht, Babur went to visit Shāh begum and Mihr Nigār Khānum. They were settled in the tents by the side of the garden.

Babur took the riot and plunder caused by townspeople and the black bludgeoners very seriously. He decided to catch those people from each corner of the town. Babur sent his men to fight them out and they were shown a way away right then.[‡]

Babur approached with reverence and gallantry to have an interview with Shāh Begum and Mihr Nigār Khānum. Both appeared ashamed from within and seemed that they couldn't excuse themselves for whatever had transpired. Their guilt prevented them from expressing their affection for Babur. In short, the scenario appeared a bit awkward.[30]

Babur has expressed discontent about the scenario:[*]
